

Migration and Law Network Seminar

AFTER METOCK: EU FREE MOVEMENT RIGHTS AND THE UK

Council Chamber, Institute for Advanced Legal Studies
Charles Clore House, 17 Russell Square, London WC1B 5DR

Wednesday 29 April 2009
2pm-6pm

Theme

This seminar will examine the current interplay between EU free movement rights and United Kingdom immigration law. This topic is of interest because of recent difficulties with EU family rights in the United Kingdom, including delays in compliance with the Metock ruling, a narrow interpretation of Directive 2004/ 38 in relation to permanent residence, and reluctance to make requests for preliminary rulings in the field. The aim of the seminar is to provoke a discussion of mismatches between EU law and UK law, including possible responses to those.

The seminar will be of interest to academics, lawyers and policy-makers interested in EU law or UK immigration law.

Confirmed speakers

Adrian Berry (Garden Court Chambers)

Samantha Currie (University of Liverpool)

Elsbeth Guild (Radboud University Nijmegen and Kingsley Napley)

Eleanor Spaventa (University of Durham)

The Migration and Law Network

The Migration and Law Network was set up in 2007 with the aim of promoting the immigration law as an academic field in the United Kingdom. Its mailing list is open to anyone who shares that interest, and can be accessed at <https://www.jiscmail.ac.uk/cgi-bin/webadmin?A0=MIGRATIONLAW>.

Questions about the network may be addressed to its co-chairs, Bernard Ryan (University of Kent): b.ryan@kent.ac.uk and Prakash Shah (Queen Mary University of London): prakash.shah@qmul.ac.uk. Further information about the network may be found here: <http://www.kent.ac.uk/law/migration/index.html>.
