

Find it on the Web with Eagle-i Electronic Access to Global Legal Information

IALS Quick Guide

www.ials.sas.ac.uk/eagle-i.htm

Eagle-i, Electronic Access to Global Legal Information www.ials.sas.ac.uk/eagle-i.htm, is a free to use dedicated portal to high quality legal information sources on the Web - developed by the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies as a national service for law.

High quality resources

Eagle-i is designed to help legal researchers find relevant information on the Internet - providing insight into authoritative web resources and the most reliable sites and materials, through site profiles, content assessments and well-maintained dynamic links.

UK, European,
Foreign, Comparative and International law

The Internet has become a valuable research tool for law but finding the most relevant and trusted sites can demand time and a range of information skills.

Who is the source?
What is the content?
When was the information produced and published?

The Eagle-i portal's Internet resource database is designed to help save time and aid discerning use of the Internet.

Quick search + results

Eagle-i can be searched using a simple search screen which enables you to find relevant sites from words in the title or our description.

Brief results provide a link to the site itself and an option to see more detail about the site.

More details

Evaluative records

Over 5,150 resource records in Eagle-i feature brief evaluative descriptions indicating who is providing the site and why - with a note on important content and coverage to help in judging which Internet resources are appropriate for your particular legal studies and research.

Browse options

Eagle-i also offers browse options to help give a quick overview of the range of sites and resources available for a particular country, jurisdiction, or legal subject topic.

Eagle-i is designed to enable law lecturers, researchers and students to discover and access quality Internet resources. It builds on records originally created by IALS for the respected Intute: Law service and continues our work in identifying the best of the web for law.

Eagle-i has tools to trace and repair broken links and prompt legal information specialists at IALS for record review to ensure reliable performance.

The Eagle-i portal for law is being developed by IALS with support from the School of Advanced Study, University of London.

For further information or to suggest a site please contact:

Steven Whittle,
Information Systems Manager
Steven.Whittle@sas.ac.uk

Institute of Advanced Legal Studies
17 Russell Square
London
WC1B 5DR

Filter by Jurisdiction

Searches can be focused on sites concerned with a particular country or jurisdiction.

Eagle-i has worldwide coverage and includes records for sites dealing with more than 200 countries as well as non-governmental international bodies and organisations involved in international law.

Filter by Resource type

Searches can also be filtered by a range of resource types represented in the database.

These include primary and secondary legal materials such as: legislation, law reports, treaties, government sites, journals, professional organisations, resource guides, and social media.

Law by Subject

Subject keywords are assigned to site records to help identify a full range of legal topics.

Key sites

Editor's choice

An editor's choice marker is used to identify some of the key information sources on the Web for law:

Advanced search

More complex searching including Boolean strategies is also supported through an advanced search form.

